USA NURSING SHORTAGE ?

- 18% increase in the population by 2012.
- The aging of the baby boomers will result in a large proportion of elderly people.
- To make matters worse, after 2011 the number of nurses leaving the profession is expected to exceed the number entering it.

USA's CURRENT NURSING SCENARIO

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has projected that more than 1 million new and replacement nurses will be needed by the year 2016. In the November 2007 issue of the Monthly Labor Review.

A report of "Occupational Employment Projections to 2016" indicated that more than 587,000 new nursing positions will be created over the next eight years, making nursing the nation's top profession in terms of projected job growth. However, even with those added jobs, that will only account for about half of all the positions actually needed!

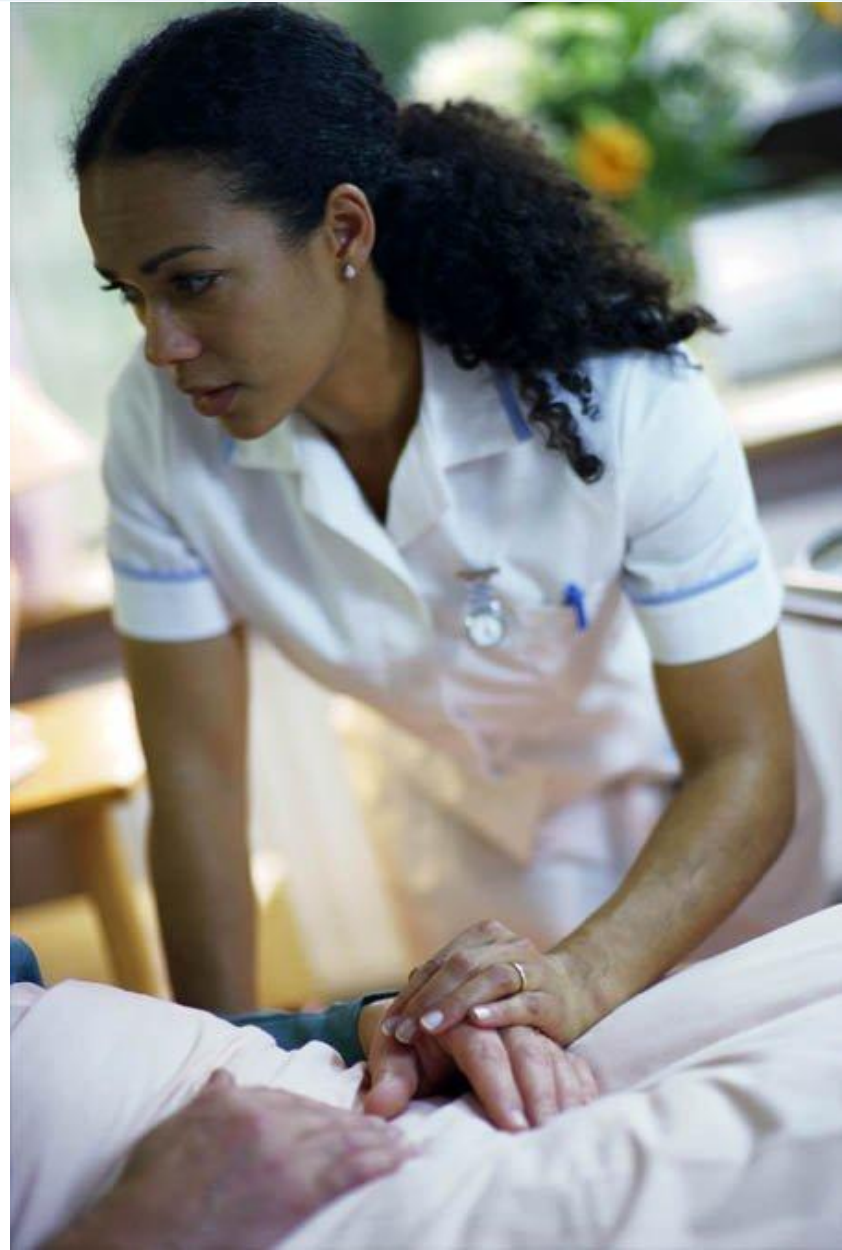

In another forecast, The Council on Physician and Nurse Supply has determined that 30,000 additional nurses need to be graduated annually to meet the nation's healthcare needs, an expansion of 30% over the current number of annual nurse graduates. Will there be enough new nurses to address this predicted shortfall?
